In concluding, the editorial says:

"A frontier incident and the thing is done. There will be a raid. Somebody will tread on the stars and stripes and all America will be remembering the Maine again."

"Not So Foolish."

"Not So Foolish."

The Telegraph, in its financial columns today says that further reflection has convinced business men that president Wilson's advice to Americans to quit Mexico was not so foolish as appeared at first sight.

"It is now seen," the Daily Telegraph says, "that the closing down of American undertakings by the departure of their owners and managers would gravely compromise president Huerta's position. In addition to the distress and discontent of the unemployed native workmen, president Huerta would be given the added responsibility of protecting American property and any failure in this respect might form a pretext for intervention. Moreover, the distress arising from the withdrawal of American capital might provoke anti-foreign demonstrations in which citizens of nations which have recognized Huerta might suffer.

"Cold Superiority."

The Saturday Review says:

"The president's tone of cold superiority will only outrage Mexican pride and stimulate president Huerta and his rivals to take a bold stand as champlons of Mexican dignity against American in solence to bring about the hospilities which Mr. Wilson professes he is most anxious to avoid."

"We have preached many times during the past troubled months that physical force not backed by moral force is brutal and futile, but we are compelled to accept the converse idea that moral force not backed by physical is no less futile and in consequence is likely to become even more brutal.

"The golden dreamers of The Hague and of the capital shrink from recognizing a fact so fatal to their theories. We shall see what Mexico has to teach them."

Amateur Diplomats.

The Evening Standard says:

"The United States, as we have all learned lately, distrusts amateurishness in sports. It knows if you must win you must rely on the expert. It is therefore rather surprising that the United States does not apply the same admirable principle to the conduct of its public affairs."

Deploring that in America diplomacy is "now left to a group of politicians, who in foreign affairs are the most amateurish of amateurs, with a secretary of state at the head of them who is too much occupied in delivering popular lectures to devote all his time to his official dutles," the Standard continues by a reference to the "singular inconclusiveness" of president Wilson's policy and says that provisional president Huerta is the only power capable of restoring order.
